Editorial

The editorial team wishes all readers a joyous and successful Indian New Year signalling a time of new beginnings and rejuvenation. It's a time for shedding the past and embracing fresh starts, much like the tender buds opening up to the sun. Nature in April displays a vivid array of colors and fragrant blooms, symbolizing the resilience and beauty within the cycle of life. Additionally, the month carries cultural and spiritual significance through festivals such as Baisakhi, Easter, and Ramadan, as reminders of human experience and the unifying power of faith in times of joy and sorrow. Drawing inspiration from resilience, hope, and renewal, various departments have organized seminars and guest lectures for the students. Many students are placed in renowned firms in campus placement drives. April is just one thread in the tapestry of life, but it is woven with endless possibilities, beckoning us to seize each moment with gratitude and purpose as we journey toward self-discovery.

Thank you
Happy reading

SHE

Ages after ages went by and buried was the beauty lost seasons went past playing the guest the sands of time did the part of the host the burnished tiara has lost its sheen the gorgeous colours are gone almost no longer do they seem to charm reminding the onlooker of the sickly ghost.
But still her eyes, her shiny eyes speak loudly of her eloquent silence her last assets that still remains reflecting the past with a sweet memento spellbinding everyone as she looks on diving them all into a musical trance but the song she sings woe betide the song to which she herself won't dance.

A metaphor of life

Frozen hands, hesitant steps
You walked right into my life.

Two steps further but tumbling back you went.
I yearned for your presence,

I cried in your absence.
Compliments brought you closer,
Your presence was my goal Negligence pushed away.
I hated the reflection, I avoided those lakes Your presence was my comfort But you never stayed too great.

Streams became rivers The cloth soaking up.
Clothes became larger
The sounds echoed within.
The fear of you consuming my entirety,
The peaceless sleep darkened Finally one night, I faced the flipped image,
I faced my flaws,
There you sat in my heart
My confidence against this whole world.
